Kushog Lakers hear from MOE

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

Instead of waiting for the province to step in and take charge, Kushog Lake residents should be getting more involved in monitoring the condition of their lake and coming up with ways to protect it, the people gathered for the annual meeting of the ratepayers' association were told on Saturday at the Stanhope Firefighters' Hall.

"I would encourage two things," said guest speaker Bernie Neary of the Ministry of the Environment's research centre in Dorset. The first is a regular monitoring program when six times a summer, residents would sink a secchi dish (a round, flat wheel with a geometric design) into the water to see how deep it can go until it is impossible to see any

Eight arrested in a drug bust

During the Labour Day Weekend, members of the Minden Detachment and drug enforcement officers from Peterborough OPP District Headquarters executed two search warrants in the Haliburton area. Eight people were arrested and quantities of cocaine, marijuana and hashish were seized. A total of 13 drug related charges were laid.

Shawn Anthony Wilkinson, age 22, of Haliburton, was charged with two counts of trafficking in a narcotic, one count of possession and one count of breach of probation.

Ronnie James Clement, age 19, of Haliburton, was charged with three counts of trafficking in a narcotic.

Steven Bradley Mann of Minden was charged with one count of possession.

Martin Patrick Powers of Georgetown was charged with one count of possession.

Michelle Karen Lemay was charged with one count of possession.

The Kinmount Fair offered thrills to those who sought them, such as these people riding the ferris wheel, as well as less stomach churning pleasures. Among them were the Warriors Day parade, horse and cattle judging, and for the first time ever, an oxen pull. For more on the fair, see the story and photos on page 7.

Cottagers, reeve discuss docking concerns

Debate over a proposed new parking and docking site for Eagle Lake island cottagers drew scores of area property owners to a meeting Sunday afternoon.

The meeting gave islanders, other cottagers and Dysart et al reeve Murray Fearrey a chance to air their views on plans to develop a permanent parking and docking site on the mainland to serve island's 14 cottage lots.

Some cottagers are concerned that the new site at the south western corner of the lake, which the municipality has purchased from Nick and Maria Lehoczy, will result in excessive noise and heavier boat traffic through the narrow bay that ends at the Eagle Lake bridge.

Reeve Murray Fearrey downplayed these concerns however. He stressed that the property would not become a public landing, but would be reserved for the exclusive use of the island owners. It could be gated and locked, the reeve said, to discourage unauthorized use.

The island was first developed by Bob Bishop in the early 1970's. As part of the development agreement, a parcel of land known as Block A, beside Silver Eagle resort, was deeded to the island cottagers for a parking and boat landing area. It has

OPP suffers from staffing shortage

by JAY KERR-WILSON
Staff Reporter

The Minden detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police doesn't have enough manpower to adequately serve Haliburton County, according to the Reeve of Dysart et al.

"The OPP can't cover a county this large with the number of seasonal residents we have with less manpower than they had last winter," said Murray Fearrey. "Either they're understaffed now or they were overstaffed then — and they weren't overstaffed then."

The approved number of constables for the Minden detachment, which is responsible for all of Haliburton County except Cardiff township, is 25. This summer the number of officers at the detachment has fallen to under 20 because of transfers and retirement.

Minden's detachment Commander Sgt. Bill Bailey says the personnel shortage is a temporary situation that hasn't affected the level of service to the community. "Everybody is putting in extra effort to maintain the level of enforcement," he said. "The men have done a tremendous job."

The detachment did have 23 constables this spring but the number has been declining. One officer retired from the force in April, and three were transferred out of Minden, one to Peterborough to work on the RIDE program and two others to an OPP detachment in Ear Falls in northern Ontario. Two of the detachments new recruits are away at the police college and one officer is going to Toronto for a year to study communications. This leaves just 16 constables at the Minden detachment.

"Compounding the shortage problem is the full time duties that several of the officers are responsible for. The Doug Rate murder case requires the full-time attention of two officers, court duty occupies another officer's time and one officer acts as community services officer."

The detachment will be gaining some men in the fall. One officer from Ear Falls is being transferred to Minden and the recruits will return from police college in October. Bailey says that more than likely the detachment will be getting two recruits from this October's graduating class. "I'm very optimistic we'll be up to full strength very shortly."

Unfortunately the manpower shortage coincides with an increase in occurrences this summer over last. Bailey says his men have done very well to keep up with things and he's received no complaints from the community about the level of protection and service.

Fearrey isn't blaming the officers in the Minden detachment for the shortage; he says the error is on the part of the Solicitor General's office.

'Too much is expected of them. The Solicitor General is cutting back on manpower which...

Campers return to Onondaga

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

WHAT WOULD REUNIONS BE without the oft-heard chorus of "Could that be...? The years haven't changed you a bit... Do you remember when we...?" And at Camp Onondaga, as campers and counsellors from the past 70 years gathered for an anniversary reunion, their conversations proved that though time may pass, reunions will never change. Those remembrances of a youth gone by are an irresistible drawing card.

Walking along the shores of Middle Bob Lake was indeed a trip down memory lane for the approximately 80 former campers. It was here they might have spent seven weeks of their boyhood each summer. If they had enjoyed the swimming, sailing, ecology lessons, camping in the tent line ringing the water's edge and simply being with dozens of other boys their own age, then they probably returned for many more summers, working their way up the ranks from "Inci's"—as in incubator—campers, counsellors in raining and finally...

went on to own camps of their own. Because the camp did not become a permanent camp until the mid-1970's, when the present owner, Monika Florian, bought it, the original campers were from the days when the camp was a summer camp for women at the camp were the nurses, hostesses and kitchen staff. Not to forget Mrs. Julia Brockwell who somehow managed to keep on eye on everything, good or bad, young boys are wont to get themselves into.

A tradition begins

It was Mrs. Brockwell's husband, Meredith, who cast his stamp on the camp's personality when he became part owner in 1919. His friend, Keith Crowther of Upper Canada College, had opened the camp on the shores of Lake Erie in 1918, calling it Onondaga "after an Iroquois tribe which had settled in the area after the American Revolution." Mr. Brockwell was a professor at Ridley College and when the two became partners in 1918, they moved more. This would let people and researchers know how much chlorophyll there is in the lake—a catch all for algae. Fifteen to 20 years ago, a secchi dish could go down six metres and still be seen, while today's testing shows the limit is down to four metres.

Residents to monitor Kushog Lake

"The amount of algae has increased and the most probable cause is shoreline development," Neary said, and this is where the second suggestion comes in.

Enrichment of a lake is caused by many factors, one of which is phosphates which leak out from septic tanks. The MOE will monitor five lakes a summer to determine who has substandard and unacceptable septic systems, but Kushog Lake is low on the list of lakes yet to be done. However, this doesn't mean people should just wait for the MOE to do the study, Neary added. In all the lakes tested so far, it has been found that on average, 70 per cent of the septic systems are substandard. "When you go in, lake after lake, the statistics don't change much from lake to lake."

Therefore, it can be assumed that 70 per cent of septic systems on Kushog Lake are substandard. "You can wait until you get the results of the MOE testing" and be forced to improve the systems, or residents can look back over the years and ask themselves some questions: When was their system put in? What has changed in the patterns of use? Were there a few extra bedrooms put on to accommodate the increased number of guests who will put more of a stress on the system? Are you using the house or cottage more often?

Because there is such a slope leading into Kushog Lake, Neary suspects that if septic systems are leaking, the leakage is going right into the lake. The more phosphorous there is in a lake, the more algae; the more algae, the more the sun's light is being blocked from the plants and animals living below the surface. Filamentous algae has already been found on the lake, forming balls of yellow jelly. "They're slimy and they're unpleasant," and the best way to get rid of them is by gently raking them onto shore.

When one resident asked whether liming the lake would be of benefit, Neary replied that it is too early to consider doing that. Lime acts as a neutralizer to the acids which flow into the lake during spring run off and summer rain storms. While the Ph level of 6.38 is not good, "you're not at the stage yet where you'll be getting really adverse affects," such as invertebrate extinction. In Sweden, where lakes are limed, the process will not begin until the lake has reached a Ph level of 6.

Yet at the same time, Neary says one of the most studied lakes has lost two-thirds of its alkalinity—its ability to neutralize acids. The little head water lake near St. Nora Lake had continued to deteriorate in the past seven years. "We think it might start to slow down but we haven't seen it yet."

For his quick reaction at a neighbour's fire, the many favours he does for people, and his contributions to the ratepayers' association, Bill Saunders was presented with the Kushog Lake Good Neighbour of the Year award from Lee Gauthier Hydro crews clearing trees on a new line on Redkin Drive near Lake Huron. The fire caused the trees to fall, and the heat from the fire was enough to cause the trees to fall beyond their control. The area was thoroughly cleared with water.

Past-president Norma Goodger then asked Neary "What is the real effect of washing your hair in the lake?" When you add up all the nutrients added by the shampoo, Neary replied, it doesn't amount to much in the overall cause of a lake's deterioration. "On the other hand, why have another source? The lake is not a bathtub. It doesn't take much to put a reasonable buffer (such as 20 metres of shoreline with trees to act as a barrier) between you and the lake. It's sort of a principle—why do it." He says that the people who grow lush green lawns leading down to the lakeshore probably contribute more phosphorous with their use of fertilizers.

When doing things which will effect your shoreline, Neary echoes the demand of the Ministry of Natural Resources: Before doing anything, you must have the MNR's okay. He points to the "famous" trout spawning beds at Ox Narrows, a site which is uncommon in its perfect viewing potential. "Any disturbance there would be catastrophic."

And while Neary says he wishes he could have some ecological reason why the fluctuating would have a negative impact in other times beside the spawning season, there is no proof the Trent Severn Waterway's drawdowns are causing environmental concerns. However, his view as a resident of Mountain Lake is one of anger. "While we're getting sucked dry, the Kawartha levels are at maximum navigational levels." In times of drought, such as the one experienced this summer, the effects should be spread more evenly throughout the Trent Severn system.

The other guest at the meeting was Harry Davis, reeve of Stanhope Township. He appeared to have the Midas touch when after one woman asked when the rest of the Buckslides Road would be paved, he surprised his audience with the announcement that the road will soon be placed in the county's jurisdiction, and as a county road, will be paved as soon as possible. (Jean Anthon, president of the Federation of Ontario Cottagers' Associations was also present.)

In other business at the meeting, Lee Gauthier presented Bill Saunders with the Good Neighbour of the Year Award.

"Last summer, wakened up during a storm, Bill smelled smoke," wrote Goodger in her nomination letter. "He discovered that his neighbour's cottage had been hit by lightning and was on fire. While his wife Audrey called the fire department, Bill grabbed some pails and began to douse the fire. Without thought for his own safety, Bill pulled a picnic table close to the building so that he could break a window and throw water inside. The fire department later reported that without Bill and Audrey's quick thinking and hard work, the building, and perhaps others might have been lost.

"Other instances of Bill's kindness and helpfulness come to mind—rushing across the lake to help rescue a boater who lost control and flipped, offering me his boat battery when mine was dead. Just the usual things a cottager does for his neighbours."

"But Bill also spent many hours last winter building the four notice boards which help our association to communicate with our members. And speaking of communication, Bill has led us through our annual social events—as auctioneer at our auction, and announcer at our picnic. Bill's wit and charm pull the picnic together, making it a personal and enjoyable get-together for our whole lake."

When he received his award, Saunders spoke of his embarrassment. Please turn to page 10

Camp Onondaga remembers the days when...

Reunion a time of bringing back memories

ed the came to the Nottawasaga River and then to Woodland Beach in 1930 when the present site was being prepared. Since boys need a wide open range in which to discover outdoor adventure and their own self-esteem, the change of locations was necessary if the camp was to grow. By this time, Mr. Brockwell was the sole owner.

Given his background and his nature, Mr. Brockwell ran the camp like an English prep school, says one of his former students, campers, and employees. In 1926, like many other Ridley College students, Adam Griffith followed his teacher's advice and joined him for the summer at the camp's former location. Later Mr. Griffith would make the move along with the camp to Middle Bob Lake and it was here he would meet his wife, Betty, who was a teacher spending her summer vacations working at the camp as a secretary.

"Mr. Brockwell inspired an affection and loyalty to Onondaga," Mr. Griffith, now 72, says of what drew the campers back year after year. "We were a small camp and the same ones came back."

"It was a beautiful place to come to and I was thrilled to be in nature. Certainly Mr. Brockwell seemed to have a knack of choosing the right people. I had more fun as staff than I did as a camper."

It's that continuation of people which makes the camp special says his wife, who agrees it's the friends they have made which is the most important aspect of their many years here. Her memories include those of Miss Micklejohn, or Inci Matron, who insisted on giving her charges a good night kiss, much to the consternation of these brave little campers. Then there was the time the camp was in an uproar over whether electricity should be installed or not. The "Dim Lights" liked the atmosphere the coal oil lamps and candles created; the "Bright Lights" felt the camp had to move along with the times.

"It was really the Victorian era when I first came

And what a show it was. When the parents arrived, not a sight of the boys was to be seen. Then, in response to a sharp blow on a whistle, they would all fling back the flaps to their tents and jump out, wearing matching red shorts and a white t-shirt—the camp's colours. Later in the day, when the activities were about to begin in the lake, the boys would repeat this performance, only this time they jumped out wearing their swim suits. Finally, it was with great pride that they made their appearance wearing white duck trousers and red blazers.

"It was hard work getting it organized but the parents gasped," says Mr. Griffith at the reunion on Saturday.

One of the boys who always walked off with a lot of the regatta trophies was Blair Jarvis. His two older brothers, John and Peter, had come to the camp in 1933 and their stories of idyllic summer days spent at Onondaga were all the prompting necessary to get triplets Jeffrey, Gregor and Blair to sign up the next year.

With his sports bent, young Blair loved Onondaga. In York Mills he was involved in sports and practiced his swimming in the Don River, but at camp, he could get involved in a myriad of activities from boxing to sailing that only the Highlands could offer. The long and dusty day-long drive in the days before Highway 35 was more than worth the promise of what was to come once you arrived.

"In those days you got involved in everything because it was like a classroom," Mr. Jarvis says. "Everybody didn't do your own thing—you did things in a group together. I certainly enjoyed it and wanted to come back. We grew up together in the summer."

"The Brockwells were pretty nice people and they liked to see the boys enjoy themselves."

On the Saturdays before the regatta, the boys would form ball teams and invariably it was a match of "Toronto versus The World." The camp was already beginning to attract campers from different

'There's a certain je ne sais quoi about the place,' says Adam Griffith, above left, who met his wife Betty at Onondaga. Since the 1930's, 'it was a beautiful place to come to and I was thrilled to be in nature.' The dining room was named after him involved in sports) and they learn to get along together," he says as he introduces his wife Lorlotte (Lottie) to the camp he remembers so fondly. By now, she knows many of the stories as well as he does. But why, after all these years, and many successes later, has he still kept all of those trophies? "I think the summers were a good part of my life, a nice part of my life. I think most guys enjoyed it."

"There's a je ne sais quoi about the place," says Mr. Griffith as he too tries to describe why the camp is so important in many people's minds. From Onondaga, he went on to become a teacher at Ridley College for 30 years (apart from the four and a half years he was in the air force), spent time at Crescent School where he met Mr. Florian and is now back at University of Toronto—as a student this time—getting his theology degree. (He became an ordained deacon in the days when this was not necessary.) On Saturday, the dining hall was named in his honour so even when he's not attending reunions, his involvement will be remembered.

Through all these years, he kept his ties to Onondaga and has worked with every director since Mr. Brockwell's days. In 1954, Mr. Brockwell had decided to sell the camp and after several groups discussed purchasing it, Onondaga Camp Limited was formed. The Board of Directors, of which Mr. Griffith was a member, "was made up of people who had been associated with Onondaga as campers, staff and parents. The board engaged Hadley Armstrong of Trinity College School as Director. Eventually, Hadley became owner of the camp" and in 1974, he sold it to the Florians.

What makes camp special

The four most important aspects about the camp, Mr. Florian explains in an earlier interview, are: the staff—"we're very careful of how we choose our staff"; the food—a French chef does the cooking; the activities—a growing multitude of them; and the facilities—gone are the rustic days but the popular tent line has remained.

His special touch has been to increase the attraction of the camp in the eyes of parents around the world. Born in Czechoslovakia to a Russian mother and Austrian father, Mr. Florian defies Canadian isolationism to openly promote the camp in countries such as Mexico, Japan, Germany, Brazil, France and the city of Hong Kong, attracting youths from all walks of life—from children of royalty to children of working parents who want their children to enjoy a few weeks of outdoor life. The first non-private school camper had arrived in 1945, and now the camp is no longer an extension of boarding school life.

While the mix of nationalities adds to the personality of the camp, it can create problems which staff have to be prepared to deal with. First of all there are the linguistic and cultural differences. Then there are the finer points such as not having the Mexicans compete against the Canadians in soccer—the odds would be heavily in favour of the young campers who "can do circles around the Canadians." Also, when "mom" and security are 3,000 miles away, the counsellor's ability to provide friendship and stability is paramount.

Campers can come for as many weeks as they like, but often the longer stays are better since it gives them time to build firm friendships. Since many of the campers go to private schools, where boys and girls don't mix in regular activities, Mr. Florian believes it adds to their maturity and personality to become accustomed to living and working together.

Onondaga is no longer run like a school and it is up to the campers to decide what activities they want to become involved in. The "flying fox"—sliding down a thick rope running from a tree on a cliff to the water below—is very popular and depending on the campers, the canoe trips have included one down the Ottawa River to Expo '67 and the first expedition through the Arctic by a Ontario camp. A summer at Onondaga provides the youngsters with the opportunity not only to develop specific skills under the guidance of a knowledgeable staff, but also to work on their growing sense of independence and identity.

For each camper there will be a different story about why Onondaga will remain a special part of their lives, if only in their memories. (Minden artist Gary Chapman was asked to do a series of five prints about the camp to make those memories come to life even more vividly.) There's the untroubled days of youth, the glory of being outside, the adventure of camping among the mosquitoes and bears, and the friends who will never lose their youth when it comes to visiting Onondaga long after they gathered around a campfire together in unity and fellowship. It is in this way the campers of today and yesterday will carry on the tradition of "Strength, uprightness and protection" which Mr. Brockwell envisioned almost 70 years ago.

'I think the summers were a good part of my life, a nice part of my life,' says Blair Jarvis, who remembers the walk-on-water stunt Adam Griffith used to pull on the campers: If they ran down to the water, knock-kneed, surface tension would then hold them up. Surprisingly enough, although the boys believed him, the trick simply wouldn't work and they'd crash through here," Mrs. Griffith says. As one of the Dim Lights, she liked how the cabins "looked like high mass" with all the candles and she remembers Mrs. Brockwell hiring a woman whose sole duty was to pour the tea in the late afternoon. Sitting on her porch overlooking the water and tent line, Mrs. Brockwell was shocked one day to see one of the counsellors paddling about with one of the female staff members. "Imagine, taking one of the kitchen girls out... in broad daylight."

Anglicans for a summer

The staff in those days were called masters and the activities were organized as if the camp were a school with trees for walls. When it came to the day of rest on Sunday, everyone tramped up to Chapel Point to hear Mr. Brockwell's sermon. The son of a Church of England priest, Mr. Brockwell always believed that "if you came to his camp, in the summer you were Anglican," says Mr. Griffith.

"In the first four weeks," he writes in a history of the camp, "a regular timetable was followed. The fifth week was canoe tripping week and in the sixth week, boys were marked almost as in school, in every activity. The final week was largely devoted to practicing for a spectacular regatta on the final Saturday, which culminated in prize-giving and a banquet dinner for all campers and their parents."

countries and "The World" was an interesting mix of various city loyalties.

How to walk on water

However, it was only once that Adam Griffith could pull his famous stunt on the gullible young campers. In the "walk on water" contest, teenaged Adam and his fellow leader would tell the boys that if they lined up on the field and raced towards the water, knock kneed of course, the resulting "surface tension" would allow them to stay on top of the water.

"We all believed them," says Mr. Jarvis, who remembers that the trick was "something about the toes." None-the-less, when the boys crashed through the surface tension and fell willy nilly into the cool water, the rouse was up for at least another year.

On the boys' one day off a week, the Jarvis brothers would walk the four miles into Minden, the excuse being that they had to spend the $1 they had among them on ice-cream cones. They'd make another trip into town for Dr. Wilfred Crow's annual end of summer party.

But it is the trophies Mr. Jarvis, who later went on to be a bomber pilot in World War Two and a professional football player for the Balmy Beach team before he injured his knee, won at the regatta which remain the crown of his achievements at Onondaga.

Priorities

SUPPOSE you're at your cottage on say, Kennisis Lake, and you notice what you think might be a break and enter taking place. You don't want to risk a confrontation with the thieves, who look like pretty tough characters, so you immediately telephone the police. At the same time, on say, Moore Lake, an irresponsible boater is zooming too close to shore, putting swimmers' lives at risk. Meanwhile two cars have collided on Highway 35 just south of Dorset. Three incidents, three telephone calls to the OPP detachment in Minden. Which gets priority? Each of them is serious. Officers must respond quickly enough to nab the thieves, determine the identity of the boater, and ensure that people injured in the car accident are dispatched swiftly to hospital. The public expects nothing less. Police are paid to deal with these and a thousand other problems efficiently and thoroughly, and we count on their presence when trouble occurs.

We take it for granted that each OPP detachment will have an adequate number of officers on duty to deal with these emergencies, but until they happen to us, or near us, we may not realize just how understaffed and overworked the OPP are in Haliburton County, especially in the summer months.

How many officers would it take to patrol an area of approximately 1,600 square miles, with hundreds of lakes, thousands of cottages, and a peak summer population that has been estimated at more than 100,000 people, and provide protection 24 hours a day? The approved number for the detachment is 25 officers. At present, because of retirements and secondments to various other duties, there are only 16. If 25 officers seems an inadequate number — and it certainly does, given the size of the county and the population the police must serve — then 16 is nothing less than an outrage.

The shortage of officers at the Minden detachment was revealed by Dysart reeve Murray Fearrey on Sunday as he addressed cottager association meetings at Eagle Lake and Haliburton Lake. On both lakes, property owners are concerned about reckless boaters and other varieties of inconsiderate people, particularly those who assault others with noise. These problems have increased in the past few years, and there is no likelihood that they will get anything but worse as the popularity of the area grows.

Yet there is very little the local police detachment can do about these annoyances. Despite the fact that there are more than 40 cottaged lakes large enough to warrant patrol by police boat, there is only one marine crew at the Minden detachment. That means in any summer, the OPP boat will visit each of these lakes once, and perhaps a few of them twice. That's hardly the kind of presence likely to deter yahoos from driving boats dangerously.

In bringing the OPP's manpower shortage to the attention of cottagers, reeve Fearrey was careful to note that the local detachment is doing an exemplary job in the face of adversity. It is not the local detachment commander's fault that there are too few officers to provide the kind of OPP presence that area property owners expect and deserve. A similar situation exists at detachments across the province. It is the Ontario Government who must take direct responsibility for the lack of OPP manpower. In its arrogant disregard for the people, whether on Sunday shopping, free trade or police protection, the present government is without equal in Ontario's history. The cabinet can find endless millions for luxurious, dignity diminishing and unnecessary social programmes, but it says it can't afford such basic social necessities as adequate police protection. Is this how distorted the priorities of Ontario citizens have become? If the province said it was going to stop the wasteful practice of giving property tax rebates to every senior citizen and instead give it only to those with very low incomes, would the placards come out, and would the hordes march on Queen's Park? No doubt. Such is our greed. The pity is that we don't get as angry about adequate police protection. If we did, we might have it.

Laws not something to play with

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Our readers write...

To the Editor:

In the Middle Ages many arrogant and corrupt European kings used the term legibus solutus to justify their own disregard for the laws which their subjects were forced to obey. The Echo's August 24 article "Wolf bounty is illegal" shows that the Haliburton County Council thinks in a like manner—provincial laws apply to everyone else but not to them. What a wonderful example to our young people: if you don't like a particular law just ignore it or break it! The next time we read in the Echo of young people (or older people, for that matter) drinking and driving, speeding, stealing, selling drugs, etc., we can thank our local councillors for encouraging contempt for the law and for the will of the majority.

Whatever individual voters think of the wolf issue they can all take a stand for democracy by asking all candidates in the up-coming elections to state clearly whether they intend, if elected, to obey the laws of this province or not. Anarchy has no place in our heritage and Haliburton county is too good a place to live for us to allow institutionalized disrespect for the law to raise its ugly face with impunity.

Teach kids to cope

To the Editor:

Re: Martha Perkins' article in which Nancy Sharp calls for innovative thinking about new ideas for Drug Awareness Week.

Ms. Sharp asks for "Fun Ideas". When will we, as a society, stop giving kids the impression that life is and always should be "fun"? We all know that this is not the case. Of course we want our children to be happy and have, as far as possible, a carefree childhood. But as adults we have the obligation to teach them coping skills because we already know that life will not be fun and carefree forever. And, like immunization, this teaching should start at an early age.

Immunization protects them from disease, coping skills help them to be strong enough to say no when this is needed.

In the future we need strong, clear thinking people to manage the ever increasing complexities of life on this planet. As Canadians, who have the good fortune to live and grow in the best country of this world we must, collectively, take leadership in these responsibilities.

The teens we have now are our future. They are all very precious. We must not overlook the fine qualities of the majority of teens who do not take drugs, who work hard in school and in their community. We must invite them to help solve the problem. I know that it works.

In a high school in West Hill I run a program called Peers Against Drugs. Students are trained by a psychologist in group leadership, group dynamics and how to listen. Then these students go to the feeder schools and address the kids in grades 7 and 8. There are no adults present, just teens speaking to kids. Principals welcome these groups and are wonderfully cooperative. We are also very fortunate that the teachers in our collegiate are very kind indeed to put up with classes missed by our P.A.D. students. Our students speak to the elementary students for one hour on three consecutive days. It is a good experience for everyone involved simply because a lot of giving is involved.

If this could happen in schools everywhere, we would be on our way to cope with the drug problem. Schools cannot do this alone. The most important influence still comes from the home.

We cannot afford to lose even one of our precious young people to substance abuse. They have a right to be taught the skills to become healthy, well functioning adults.

FEIR PLAY

Creighton Feir

THE RAIN THAT FELL over the weekend didn't dampen the spirits of the thousands who were on hand over the Labour Day weekend to attend the annual Kinmount Fair, billed as one of the best small town fairs in Ontario. This popular fair, which drew well over 30,000 again this year continues to pack them in year after year. People from all parts of Ontario as well as Haliburton County make up the big crowd who attend this three day event. If you don't like crowds don't attend the Kinmount Fair. Traffic was lined up and cars were parked from the other side of the Highlands Cinema right up to the fairgrounds and if you are familiar with Kinmount you will know how far this really is. You might also wonder what brings people back to this fair year after year? The answer is really quite simple. This outstanding fair that is in a class by itself has something for everyone. The success of a fair of this size just doesn't happen, it takes hard work from people like Bill Scott M.P., his son Guy and all the hard working people in the Kinmount Fair Board plus the hundreds of volunteers who have to man their posts on fair days. These are the people who bring it all together on fair day. Keep up the good work folks as you are giving the village and people of Kinmount something that they can be mighty proud of.

Allison Masters, formerly of Minden, and her husband, John were big winners in the Wintario Draw held in Kinmount last Thursday evening. Allison, who is the daughter of Charles and Shirley Brandon of Minden, is richer to-day by $100,000., her reward for holding a winning ticket. Allison, who lives in Toronto, purchased her ticket from the Becker's store in downtown Minden when she was home visiting her parents recently.

You can always tell that fall is just around the corner when you see the H.H.S.S. Redmen football team working out on the football field at the High School. Look for them any day now out on the field working themselves into shape for the upcoming season. Another reminder that fall is here and winter can't be far off is the advertisement on this week's sports page telling us that the Haliburton Minor Hockey Registration will be held at the arena in Haliburton on Wednesday, September 14 from 6 to 9 p.m. and October 1 from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. The rates have set at Tykes $50., all other leagues, one player $70., two players $125., three or more players $150.

On August 21, Bruce and Ruth (Brown) Nesbitt celebrated their 45th wedding anniversary. The couple was told they had been invited to barbecue at a farm near Bethel where Bruce and Ruth first lived. They were pleasantly surprised when they reached the farm to find 60 people gathered to help them celebrate their anniversary. Among those present were the attendants at their wedding 45 years ago, namely Bruce's sister Blanche and cousin Morris Stamp. The happy couple was presented with many gifts. Four of their five children attended the event: Ken Nesbitt, Lennard, Marilyn Hick, Evelyn Hoskin and Bruce's three sisters, a brother and sister of Ruth. Relatives were present from Newmarket, Lefroy, Barrie, Gilmour, Haliburton, Oshawa, Minden and Donald.

Haliburton Minor Hockey Association are all set for the O.M.H.A. try-outs which begin at the arena in Haliburton starting this Wednesday evening, September 7 and continuing on Wednesday evenings September 14, 21 and 28. Ice time for Novice will be from 5 to 6 p.m. Atom 6 to 7 p.m., Pee Wee 7 to 8 p.m. and Midge 9 to 10 p.m.

The community was saddened on Wednesday, August 31 when the news arrived of the death of Gordon Bennett following a lengthy illness. Gord who was in his 54th year, was the husband of Marlene Bennett, father of Suzanne and James. He worked for many years as a mechanic at Curry Motors Limited and a few years ago, he purchased the business on Highway 121 known as Coneybeare Motors Limited and changed the name to Bennett Motors. Ill healthy finally forced Gord out of the business and he sold the property and garage to PineStone Inn and Country Club. He will certainly be missed in the Community. The Funeral Service was held from the Gordon A. Monk Funeral Home in Minden on Saturday with Interment at Ingoldsby Cemetery.

Here, there and everywhere... Jamie McQuarrie, a well-known Lindsay lawyer who had many friends here in Haliburton County, died suddenly at his residence in Lindsay on Monday, August 29. He was in his 64th year... Mr. and Mrs. Willis Walker of Haliburton spent three days visiting with friends and relatives recently in Gravenhurst, Penetang and Midland... Mr. and Mrs. Bill Deacon of Oakville, Ontario were visitors to the area last week... The local Terry Fox Run date has been set for Sunday, September 18 beginning at the Government Dock on Haliburton at 2:00 p.m.

POINTS OF VIEW

THE VIEW FROM HERE

Harvey Clarke

EVERYBODY LOVES a winner. Nobody has much time for the losers of this world. This is strange, because it seems like there are always a lot more losers than winners.

Over 30 years in the promotion business, I must have given away close to a million dollars in cash and prizes. And one of the most successful of all was just for losers.

An announcer at the radio station has accepted a trip for two to England from an airline — which was not allowed. Freebies to announcers led to many free plugs and less commercials for the station.

To get him off the hook, the manager agreed to give the trip away as a station promotion, and turned it over to me. Because it had a time deadline, I had to come up with something fast. I think we had just about two weeks to come up with our winner.

When we looked at the costs and the time it would take to prepare and distribute any type of coupon, it was just out of the question. This got me to thinking about what numbered things that people already have that we could work with — when a little light went off in my head.

Wintario was still quite new, and getting the kind of attention that seems to be reserved more often for the 6-49 these days. Most people — or at least those likely to enter a contest — probably already had a Wintario ticket!

Not only that, but they would have a couple of them in the time period I was working with, and not only that but they had a place already for the name, address and phone number printed on the back.

And that's how the "Lucky Losers' Second Chance draw was born. If your ticket wasn't lucky in the (then) weekly draw...you still had a chance to win! It was such a great idea, that Wintario even agreed to give us a quantity of free books of tickets as consolation prizes, since they were getting a lot of free promotion out of the whole idea.

How did it go? Well, in the simplest terms, we got One Million Dollars worth of tickets sent in. In fact, it was so successful, that an automaker approached our sales department to tie in with it — drop your tickets off in our showrooms, take a test drive and get a free book of tickets, etc. — and they gave a car as the major prize.

It was such a success they did it a second time. We never seemed to hit that million dollar total again, but we came very close. Not that it wasn't without some problems. Apparently some buyers — or their spouses — just weren't lottery believers. Now, psychologists say that, for most people, there is an underlying acceptance that they aren't really going to win the big prize. They will tell you that they really don't expect to win the big prize — they'd be happy with one of the smaller, consolation awards.

But way down underneath that is a real dream of winning the whole thing. In fact, it is the week of dreaming about what you would do if you won that gives the pleasure to most people. Somehow, they can tear up the ticket and buy next week's and start all over again.

I can't, and neither can a lot of other people. Why they would figure they would be more likely to win our contest than the real lottery, I'll never know. But a number of them sent in their tickets BEFORE they knew if they had won or lost!

A certain number of these pessimists had husbands or wives who had written down the numbers for reference. When their number came up, as the saying goes, and they went to their spouse to get the winning ticket, they weren't too happy to find that the disbeliever in the family had already sent it to the radio station as a loser!

When this started to happen, we had to make special arrangements to supervise these people while they went through the contest mail. My assistant and I spent many a weary hour trying to find something worthwhile we could do, sitting in a room full of mailbags with these upset people as they went through thousands and thousands of envelopes — looking for the one they sent in.

I can recall a couple of cases where there was success, several others that were definite failures — and even one where they found the envelope, but the number was twisted from the one that had been written down. (Now there was an unhappy man).

Finally, we worked out a mutually satisfactory deal with the Wintario people: we had all the ballots destroyed by experts immediately after the draw — and got an affidavit to that effect from the shredding company...

The whole idea finally ran its course as far as our audience was concerned, and we went on to other novel ways to attract audiences through varying other attention-getting devices.

As a member of an international broadcasting industry association, I wrote up a description of the contest and its success so that others could share the idea in the U.S. and Australia and other countries where we had members.

I know it was a winner for a promoter at a Vancouver radio station. He ran it for a car dealer there, submitted it to a Canadian radio award competition — and won the grand prize.

I may have been a loser, but my idea was the winner...

Things that go bump in the night

DOWN OUR ROAD

Sharon Lynch

THE FIRST TIME he heard the sound he wasn't sure what it was. It pulled him from the depths of a sound sleep, dragging him back to consciousness like a fish hauled into a boat. He floundered for a minute, remembering where he was and looked at the clock. Twelve-0-seven a.m. He had been tired when he arrived at the cottage in the early evening and after unpacking the food, he'd had a brandy and gone straight to bed. He had fallen to sleep immediately; the kind of sleep that follows a week of too much work and too few hours to get it all done, topped off by the grinding holiday weekend crawl along the highway.

But he was awake now and realized it had been a car, or rather a truck he had heard pass on the road past his place. The cottage was set back from the lake and narrow little road was not far from his bedroom window. Lying in bed staring up into the darkness, he wondered who it had been so late at night. He knew his neighbours and there were only two cottages after his before the road came to a dead end. The fellow next door wasn't due to arrive until mid-afternoon tomorrow and the elderly couple at the end hadn't been up all summer. They hadn't been well this year.

He hoped he wouldn't have any trouble getting back to sleep and toyed with the idea of another brandy. At first, after the cottage had been broken into, he had felt vaguely uncomfortable about staying at the lake by himself. A glass or two of brandy before retiring had been the only way to ensure a good night's sleep. But that had all happened last year and the feeling had passed.

Anyone who has ever been robbed knows that feeling. To have some stranger invade the privacy of your home and paw through your personal things leaves a person feeling exposed somehow, vulnerable. More than the loss of certain special possessions, he thought of his mother's bedside lamp; more than that loss, is the terrible sense of having been violated. Your own private piece of this planet no longer feels quite so private.

Anyway. Enough of that, he thought. Rolling over on his side, he punched the back into shape and closed his eyes. Then he heard it again. Only he was wide awake this time and the sound was very distinct. It was a truck and it was pulling something, a trailer of some kind. Then he realized the vehicle had slowed right down after passing by and then stopped for a minute. Now it was coming back. It hadn't turned around so it must be backing up. It was backing into his driveway. How could it? His car was—no, his car wasn't there. He had come up with his brother-in-law over on Boshkung. His daughter had needed the car this weekend, so Harry had given him a lift.

With a flash he knew what was happening. No lights at this end of the road, no cars in the driveways. A truck pulling a trailer, backing it up to his cottage in the middle of the night. The bastard from last year was back! He knew that's who it was in the driveway. Lifting the edge of the curtain he peeked out the window to see two figures in the truck. Of course,—the trailer was to take the bigger pieces this time.

Shaking with fear and indignation, he quickly slipped out of bed and reached for his flashlight. They were still in the truck and had turned out their headlights. It was a night without a moon, dark as a pit. It gave him time. He held the light straight down so it couldn't be seen from outside and went over to his closet. His rifle was there. He was damned if he'd take this lying down. Not again. A few flat tires would keep them there until the OPP arrived.

Even though he knew the cottage well, it seemed different in the dark, full of shadows and unexpected shapes. Damn, he thought as he bumped his knee on a kitchen chair leg. He put his hand on the doorknob and slowly turned. Pushing the door open, he had a moment of hesitation. What if they were maniacs, panicked and turned on him? He was only one, but there were two of them. But he had the element of surprise going for him. They thought they were alone and were taking their sweet time. Well they're in for a shock, he chuckled to himself, trying to bolster his courage and steady his fingers.

His eyes adjusted to the dark and made out the shape of a man standing in front of the truck and off to the side. He moved around on the other side, gliding silently from tree to tree until he was even with him. With a shout, he flicked on the flashlight and held it full in the man's face. "What the hell do you think you're doing here?" he yelled at the stranger. His voice broke the air like a gunshot and the man gasped. Out of the corner of his eye he saw the other figure in the truck freeze.

Raising an arm to ward off the light, the man shouted back, "Don't shoot! I'm looking for the Lloyd's place! I'm supposed to be delivering John Lloyd's sailboat and I can't find his cottage."

Boy did he feel like a fool then. There he was standing in his own driveway in his blue striped underwear, heelless slippers, no glasses and he knew his hair probably stood straight up on end. He had a flashlight in one hand and a gun in the other, and all he could do was smile. Sheepishly.

Back to work: Time for new things

SUNNYSIDE UP

Martha Perkins

WATCHING CHILDREN on their first day back to school conjures up many different reactions: compassion for these sensitive souls who find themselves immersed in this strange new world; envy for their opportunity to spend their days in an environment full of ideas and the eagerness to share them; and reflection upon whether you will ever be able to re-capture the excitement and nervousness you once felt as you boldly accepted the sorrows and the pleasures of a normal school day.

In a way, I am still able to enjoy a sense of anticipation during the days leading up to and following Labour Day. Through one of those quirks of fate, it turns out that the aura around these special days has not totally diminished. For it was three years ago this week that I started out on my new career when I opened the doors of the Echo office, eager to see what such a move would bring me.

If I had the ability to stand outside the scene and watch it repeated, I'm sure my facial expressions on my first day of work bore a similar countenance to those I had on many first days of school. What will my fellow employees/students be like? Will I be able to find things in my new community/classroom. Can I succeed/pass?

Well, those first days are now over, and I have welcomed much change in these three years. Yet, thankfully, I have not lost that sense of beginning something new come my anniversary. No longer a simple matter of graduating from grade to grade, the progression of learning is more subtle but still quite clear when you look for it. And instead of thinking one more year at the Echo will mean one more year of the same story, I can look forward to the next 12 months with as much promise of discovery as I felt in my younger days.

The more you can look back and say "Wow, look at all I have learned in the past year," the more you can look forward and say "Wow, think of all the things I'm going to learn this year." Never will I reach a point when I think I know it all, have written about it all, or explored all there is to explore. Growth makes you realize you'll never reach the stage when you can't learn any more. But it is a process which gives you confidence and instills in you the dedication to setting, and reaching, new goals.

It's so hard to say where the next year with the Echo will take me. I'm like those students who know that I'm here to learn, but am not exactly sure what that learning will be. I also want to think I share some of the philosophy of that little girl whom I interviewed last week. She was excited about going into Grade 1 because it was something she had never done before. I want to be excited about the interviews I will have and the stories I will write—simply because they're something I've never done before.

Clinging to the Highlands' nature

AS OTHERS SEE IT

thankful for them. I have to struggle with what didn't get done, who I didn't get to talk to and wish I had a little more time. Maybe just one nice breezy day to sail down Kashagawigamog again and look at the hills while listening to the quiet wind in the sails and the waves at the bow. The quiet of August was so graceful after the roar of tourism in July.

I don't want to go to bed this last night of summer. I want to sit and listen to the stillness, smell the dampness and watch the billowing dark clouds erase and reveal the moon. One is supposed to return to the city rested, so eventually I give in and lie awake, hands behind my head and thankful for this place, its people and peace.

I trouble about acid rain and the death of trees; the sinking water levels, the dying fish and loons; I worry about what "development" destroys as well as what happens to people when they get too much money and can't stop the drive for more. Soon, the pain of concern subsides and that sense of being a part of the creation and the community—its brokenness as well as its beauty, gently graces me with the sleep that I have only in the midst of these hills.

Tomorrow I return to the city. Yesterday, many yesterdays ago, the city came and claimed the Highlands, but as yet, the city has not possessed them. Here all nature sings. Even me. I'm thankful.

The trunk is packed and the cottage is about for us to leave. I think of all the folks who I cherish here and many faces flash through my mind. I feel

Haliburton Soccer Club ends successful season

by JAY KERR-WILSON
Staff Reporter

The Haliburton Dixie Lee Soccer Club ended their sixth, and most successful season ever by winning the consolation round at the league play-off tournament.

The team went into the play-offs in third place with a record of ten wins, four losses and two ties. Eight of the nine teams were eligible for the tournament with the bottom ranked team, Gravenhurst Alumni, being eliminated from play.

Haliburton began the tournament on Saturday by beating Muskoka International 2-1. Paul Milne opened the scoring for Haliburton with five minutes left in the first half. Muskoka's Desi Nicolich tied it up 10 minutes into the second half in the second half and Haliburton's Ivor Thompson put the game winner into the net with 10 minutes left in the game. It was Thompson's first outing since June 5 because of a knee injury.

Haliburton's next opponent was the first place Orillia International. Orillia defeated Haliburton by a score of 2-0 in a hard fought game. Orillia has dominated the league all season and defeated the Bracebridge Centennials by a score of 5-1 before facing Haliburton.

Haliburton's third game was against the Centennials whom they played to a 1-1 tie. Haliburton's goal came 15 minutes into the first half. Chris Carl chipped a penalty kick over the defensive wall, Joe Mancuso redirected the ball to Haps Walter who drilled the ball passed the goalie into the net.

Bracebridge came back and tied the score three minutes into the second half when Dave Black converted a Ben Deith corner kick. Bracebridge pressed hard for the winning goal but the Haliburton defense hung on. "We bent but we didn't break," said Haliburton manager Brian Moore. Because of overall points, Haliburton's one win, one tie and one loss allowed them to advance into the semi-finals on Sunday against the Midland North Stars.

The team came didn't play up to their potential in the opening half and went into the second half trailing Midland by a score of 4-0. Jan Haedicke and Mancuso scored for Haliburton but it wasn't enough. The final score was 4-2.

The loss dropped Haliburton into the consolation round where they faced the second place Huntsville Juniors. In what was described by Moore as a rough game the Haliburton Club soundly defeated Huntsville by a score of 6-0. Scoring for Haliburton were Tommy Eager, Paul Milne, Hans Walter with two, Joe Mancuso and team coach Brian Holden with his first goal of the season.

Orillia went on to win the tournament by beating Midland in the championship game by a score of 4-0.

Moore said the team had a very successful season. Haliburton player Darryl Goodall is trying out for the Wilfred Laurier University Mustangs, last year's university soccer champions. The team wishes Goodall the best of luck.

The team is going to be playing two exhibition games against the High School soccer teams some time in the near future.

Locarno hosts and wins ball tourney

Locarno Resort staged its first Labour Day Three Pitch Softball game on Sunday and organizers are calling the event, "a roaring success."

The home team, Locarno Club Haliburton came out on top of the "A" division with the Beaconbrook team being runners-up.

The "B" division champs came from the Wig-a-Mog Inn with the runners-up coming from McKeck's restaurant. Organizer John Moulton said all the teams enjoyed good spectator support, and a group of Swiss tourists staying at the resort were treated to their first game of softball. Thanks go to Labatt's, B and G Wines, McGillicuddy's Snapps and Strano Foods for their support. Winning teams were presented with t-shirts and baseball caps.

Plans are already under way for next year's event

Kinmount Fair is busy despite rain and cold

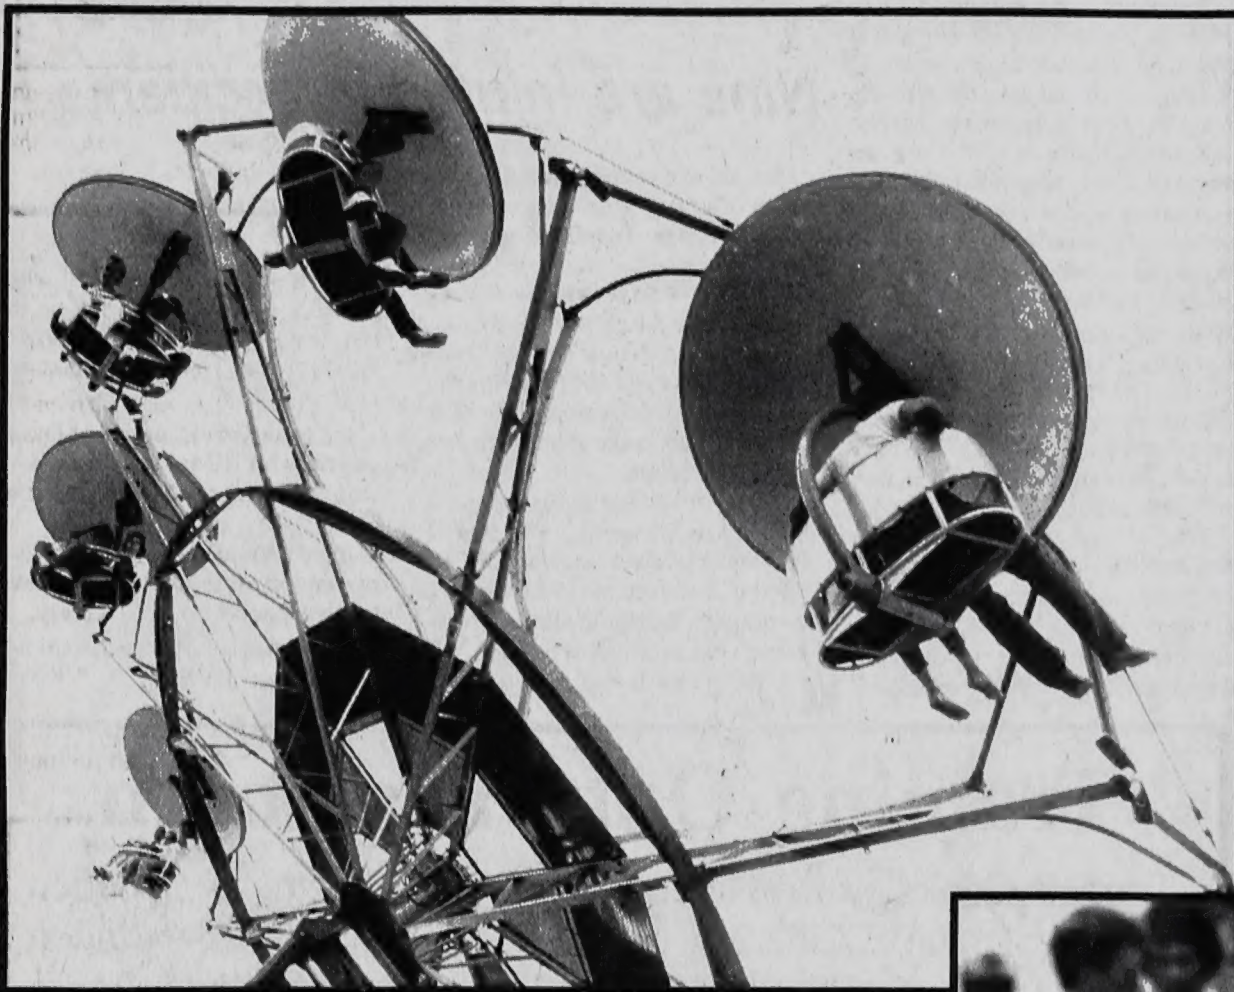

What does a little rain mean to people in the mood for a fair? Not much, as the attendance figures at last weekend's Kinmount Fair make clear. Despite Sunday's cold, blustery rain, as many as 35,000 people attended the three day fair, according to organizer Guy Scott.

Attendance on Friday showed a big gain over previous years, while on Saturday the fairgrounds thronged with visitors on hand for the grandstand show, the horse and oxen pulls, and competition in numerous farm animal classes.

Miranda Waalwyck was crowned queen of this year's fair, and Donna Pearson was named princess.

One of the highlights of Saturday's activities was the oxen pull, a first for the Kinmount Fair. In contrast to the horse pulls, where the teamsters and their helpers have to work hard to control the powerful animals as they back up to the stone boat, the oxen pull is almost a languid affair. The teamster does not have to wrestle with a harness, but merely walks in front of his team to urge them on. Despite their docile temperaments, the oxen are powerful beasts that can pull as much as a light horse team when conditions are right. Saturday's winning yoke drew more than 8,000 pounds.

The heavy horse pull, always a crowd favourite, was highly competitive once again this year. The top team, driven by Leroy Nesbitt of Reaboro, drew more than 12,000 pounds on their way to victory.

Second prize in the heavy horse draw was won by Ingram Wessell of Norland.

In the light horse event, Murray Cowen of Haliburton took first prize. The weight of his team's draw was not available.

A record number of entrants participated in the various cattle classes this year, with more than 300 animals on display. And there were some familiar names among the winners, as many of the top cattlemen from previous fairs once again walked off with an impressive number of prizes.

Among the top cattlemen were John Wilson of Norwood with seven firsts in the Limousin class, Bryce Handly of Campbellcroft with three firsts in the Simmental class, Keith Goble of Janetville with four firsts in the Charlais class, Grant Elmhurst of Indian River with six firsts in the Hereford class, and Ross Bailey of Port Perry with four firsts in the Angus class.

In the goat show, always a popular event at Kinmount, Betty Ann Blanchard of Sunderland dominated the Alpine class with six firsts, Susan Mangan of Tory Hill had five firsts in the Nubian class, Chuck Cadeau of Restoule dominated the Saanen class, Helen Parnell of Port Hope topped the Toggenburg class, Joanne Emons of Brechin won top honours in the LaMancha class, and in the Grade class, Brenda Belbin of Mississauga captured the most first place ribbons.

The domestic classes also drew a record number of entries this year. In quilt competition, Esther Graham of Irondale won two firsts, Shirley Elmhurst of Orillia won two firsts, and firsts also went to Simone Harrison of Minden, Bessy Burk of Lochlin and Joanne Penney of Kinmount.

John Ritchie of Crystal Lake was the big winner in the afghan competition. Ursula Nietsch of Kinmount submitted the best bulky knit pullover in the eyes of the judges, and Kathy Garber of Minden created the best crocheted article.

The baking competition is a favourite not only with competitors but with judges and spectators as well, and as usual it drew a substantial number of entries.

Among the winners were: Ruth Strong, Tory Hill, best fruitcake; Carol Evans, Gooderham, best decorated cake; Betty Holly, Scarborough, best carrot cake; Doreen Bales, Kinmount, best butter tarts; Violet Schroter, Kinmount, best loaf of white bread, (in all, Violet Schroter won 19 prizes for her baking!); Jack O'Neill, Fenelon Falls, best apple pie;

Sharon Watson, Burnt River, best blueberry pie; Susan Kerns, Kinmount, best bran muffins; and Wally McMullin, Kinmount, best pie backed by a man.

The heritage baking contest, in which contestants must use an identical, hundred year old recipe, was won by Violet Schroter.

Dry weather played havoc with the vegetable and flower competitions, as the number of entries was down considerably from previous years.

The biggest pumpkin at the fair was grown by Billy Fountain of Kinmount. The best garden display was that of Bonnie Wilkinson of Irondale. Charlie Molyneux of Kinmount grew the best cucumber, while Bea Taylor of Minden produced the best onions.

Among the flower winners, Gwen Arbuckle of Cobocok had the best begonias and Neil Cartwright of Minden had the best roses.

Other highlights of the fair included the warriors day parade on Saturday, with representatives from 23 Legions, and the demolition derby on Sunday, which was won by Morgan King (his hometown was not noted in the results).

Vacancies can't be filled

ment. The Minden detachment has only one marine officer during the summer who is assisted by a student of law and security from one of the community colleges. They are responsible for the county's almost 200 lakes. Bailey says the boat is sent out on an "as needed basis." If complaints are received about abuse of a certain waterway then that is where the boat is sent.

Fearrey says almost every cottage association he's talked to, complains about the lack of law enforcement on the water.

The problem of understaffed OPP detachments is not unique to Minden. Superintendent Wheeler is the OPP District Commander in Peterborough and says the replacement process can't meet the demand for more officers. "To use an analogy, if you have ten dollars and you have to spend a dollar at eleven different places you're going to come up a dollar short," he explains. "Just because Minden has an approved compliment of 25 doesn't mean they will always have 25 officers. They might not have 25 officers for years but that doesn't mean the work isn't being done. We have to put the people we have where they are most needed."

Wheeler says the process for determining a detachment's approved compliment is extremely complicated and involves studying the number of occurrences in each detachment, the size of the jurisdiction, the response times and the amount of time spent on investigation and enforcement. He says the fact that Haliburton's population swells to over 100,000 people in the summer from a population of 13,000 in the winter is taken into account. The approved compliment for each detachment is reviewed annually and Minden's has remained at 25 for several years.

Because the process of recruiting and training new recruits takes almost a year Wheeler says it's difficult to fill sudden vacancies. "If someone quits tomorrow, we don't have anyone to take his place. It's impossible to fill all the vacancies we have."

Ultimately, Wheeler says, the decision of how many officers are employed rests with the Solicitor General, not with the OPP. "We all work for politicians and the service we provide is a reflection of the dollars they spend."

The communications officer for the Ministry of the Solicitor General, Bob Purcell, says understaffed OPP detachments is "a situation that has always existed and will always exist. There are very few detachments at full compliment but nobody's screaming for more manpower."

Nine are injured in accidents

Six people were injured as the result of a two car accident on Hwy. 35 at Dorset on Tuesday August 30, at 3:55 p.m.

A 1980 Chevrolet, driven by James Wyatt Black age 16 of Sherborne was struck by a 1981 Chevrolet driven by Christopher Hone, age 20, of Scarborough while attempting to make a left turn into a service station.

Two of Black's passengers, Sharon Logan, age 21, of Richmond Hill and Malica Archer, age 15, of London, received major injuries and were taken to Huntsville Hospital. Hone's passenger, Joseph Ironi, age 19, of Toronto, was also taken to hospital.

Black was charged with making an unsafe left turn.

Three people were injured when two pick-up trucks collided on the Harburn Rd. one kilometer north of Haliburton on Thursday, September 1, at 9:35 p.m.

Joe Don Perrin, age 52, of Dysart swerved his GM truck to miss an animal on the road and was struck by Helen Cardinell, age 57, of Dudley. Cardinell and her two passengers were treated at Haliburton Hospital.

Perrin has been charged with failing to share the road.

BUSINESS NEWS

Applying the principles of stress to a useful purpose

by JAY KERR-WILSON
Staff Reporter

IN INDUSTRY, STRESS on machines and materials is something to avoid. Too much stress applied to any machine will cause a breakdown, too much stress on a bridge and it will collapse.

But Gerry Vandenbrink has found a way to harness the potentially destructive forces connected with stress and put it to good use by controlling and measuring it. Vandenbrink's company, Applied Stress Technology, builds transducers that electronically measure stress for use in weight measurement.

The transducers are stainless steel units, usually shaped like a cylinder. When a weight is placed on one end of the transducer, small electronic sensors built into the unit measure the stress being put on the steel. By measuring the amount of stress the sensor can calculate the amount of weight resting on the burdened end of the device.

An example of a practical use of the transducers is in the scales used for weighing transport trucks along highways. As a truck pulls up to the station and passes over the scale, its weight places stress on the transducers buried under the surface. The sensors convert the amount of stress applied to the transducers to an electronic signal that lets the inspector in the station know how heavy the truck is.

Vandenbrink began the business, located on the Blairhampton Road in Minden, two and a half years ago. He received his education in stress analysis at the university in Utrecht, in the Netherlands, and moved to Canada in 1952. Vandenbrink spent 16 years as an instructor at the University of Western Ontario and has worked in industry educating engineers in the latest technology in stress analysis.

A need for expertise

There is very little expertise in the field of stress analysis in Canada and Vandenbrink found his background and knowledge of the subject made his advice valuable and he gained tremendous experiences by dealing with a variety of stress related problems that came up.

He was in charge of testing the Alaskan pipeline for stress resulting from frost and worked with Nova on the Alberta pipeline. He says the principles behind his transducers and the stress analysis he was conducting on those projects is essentially the same. The difference is that his units are only subjected to one third of the stress that would cause any damage. Besides those used in weight measurement, Applied Stress Technology also produces transducers that measure stress in bridges, loads on cranes at construction sites and vibration in buildings.

The company is also working on transducers that measure, by weight, exact quantities of feed for livestock, and ingredients for chemical fertilizer.

Vandenbrink moved up to Minden and set up himself up as a consultant. Businesses would approach him with their needs for weight or stress measuring devices and he would design a transducer that would fulfill their requirements. But it soon became apparent to Vandenbrink that he should take the extra step and manufacture the transducers he was designing.

Applied Stress Technology is located in Minden because of the attraction the natural environment holds for Vandenbrink. "We suited the business in a way that we could live here," he says. There were obstacles to overcome in locating so far north of Toronto however. "All are suppliers are in the city and we used to have to make the trip two or three times a week." Over the two and a half years of operation, Vandenbrink is now able to had parts delivered to his Blairhampton site and has eliminated most of the inconveniences connected with his location. "We operate as well here as we could in the city and in some cases, even better." Finding employees to do the highly technical and delicate work involved in assembling and calibrating the transducers is no harder in Haliburton than in Toronto. Because there is no significant level of expertise in the field of stress analysis in Canada, Vandenbrink has to personally train everyone who comes to work for him and as he says, "it makes no difference whether I train someone from here or someone from Toronto."

There are three employees working for the company. All have been hired locally and Vandenbrink is very impressed by the work they do. Because so much of the work involves installing and wiring the delicate sensors in the transducers, Vandenbrink's employees must have steady hands. When a person applies for a job with Applied Stress Technology they are asked to thread a needle as an indication of their manual dexterity. It takes approximately eight months to train each employee.

Strict rules at work

The three women who work for Vandenbrink are not allowed to smoke or wear make-up in the lab because even the smallest particles in the air can affect the electronics. "Dust is our greatest enemy." Compounding this problem is the dust created by traffic along the unpaved Blairhampton Road.

Most of the company's customers are people who Vandenbrink knew and advised while working in the city. He said he quit his job and moved up here to early in 1986, "to get out of the racket." He was planning to take several months off before opening up his consulting business but because of the demand for his expertise he was working after only two weeks, giving courses in stress analysis right across Canada.

BUSINESS NEWS

Designing equipment for customer's specific job

He set up his consulting operation in March of 1986 but his customers kept asking why he didn't build the transducers he designed for them. Although manufacturing hadn't been Vandenbrink's original intention, the demand was so great that he was building the units, on a small scale by November of the same year.

The electronic transducer business is a highly specialized field. There are only about six companies in the world producing the product. Most of those are located in the United States except for one company in Israel and Applied Stress Technology in Canada.

Vandenbrink says there's no need for him to secure an export market yet. There is an annual market of $25 million for the transducers in Canada and $8 million of that market is based in Ontario. This year Applied Stress Technology will sell about $500,000 worth of transducers to that market, the rest of the units come from the United States. Vandenbrink says over the next few years he expects to be able to deliver approximately $1 million worth of merchandise. "We still have a way to go before exporting out of the country. We'd like to make a dent in the number of transducers being imported from the United States."

Because the company's main market is located in Ontario it can take care of delivery itself. The $60 it costs to deliver units to the south compares favorably with the $300 shipping costs they have to pay to have someone else.

When he first began manufacturing the transducers, Vandenbrink says the units were custom built for customers depending on the application of the unit. He still designs transducers for certain jobs but he's accumulated so many varying models that many have become standard products for certain needs. The company produces over 60 different variations of transducers that measure loads ranging from 100 to 200,000 pounds. But the number is constantly being added to as new units are designed.

Some interesting problems

In designing transducers for customers Vandenbrink sometimes has to overcome some interesting problems. The company is currently in the process of supplying a customer with devices for weighing live cattle. The acids contained in the cattle's urine was eating through the seals on the old devices and ruining the electronics so Vandenbrink designed and manufactured a transducer with Teflon seals which are resistant to corrosion.

Another customer, Kellogg's Ltd., needed transducers for a research project they are conducting. They had been buying American units at a cost of $12,000 (US) each but the devices kept breaking down. Vandenbrink designed a transducer especially for Kellogg's at a cost of only $450 (Can) which is able to withstand the demands put upon it.

Applied Stress Technology transducers have two advantages over American produced units. The first is the fact that the Applied Stress units are custom designed and built for the specific job requirements. The American companies produce standard, off-the-shelf equipment.

The second advantage is that Applied Stress units are constructed from stainless steel which, according to Vandenbrink has proven to be extremely attractive in the market place. The use of stainless steel recently created a problem for Vandenbrink when the price of the metal skyrocketed from $1.75 a pound to $4.00 a pound. Considering that some of Applied Stress Technology's transducers contain up to 24 pounds of steel this represents a significant increase in the cost of manufacturing the units. Vandenbrink says he's tried not to pass the increase on to his customers by trying to save money in other stages of the manufacturing process. For example he redesigned a $40 connector so it would only cost $5. If everybody tried a little harder to keep prices down Vandenbrink thinks it might be easier to control the trend of upward spiralling inflation.

Some plans will wait

The stainless steel parts for the transducers are made in a machine shops. A shop in Peterborough supplies 80 per cent of the demand and the other 20 per cent comes from Toronto. Vandenbrink says eventually he would like to operate his own machine shop but the quality of work being received from the Peterborough operation is so good and the arrangement is working out so well that it is not a priority in his plans for expansion.

What is a priority is a larger building. Vandenbrink is operating out of 980 square feet at present but wants to expand the facilities to 2500 feet. He says the enlarged facilities will enable him to employ five more people. He also wants to set up a "clean room" for the work done on the electronics. A clean room would have a filtration system that would purify the air and eliminate dust particles. He hopes to have the facility ready for next spring.

Vandenbrink knows he has a market for his products. He says Canadian companies are glad to find a domestic manufacturer for the transducers they are used to buying from the United States. Recently the American Department of Defense asked Applied Stress Technology to submit a quotation for filling an order for them but Vandenbrink had to decline because he doesn't have the facilities to handle that much business.

If a business as specialized as his can successfully locate in Haliburton, Vandenbrink doesn't see why there isn't more high tech manufacturers taking advantage of the location. "How many places can you run a business like this and be surrounded by all this nature," he says sweeping his arm at the nearby forest.

never been used for that purpose, however. Instead, the island cottagers were given permission to use docking facilities adjacent to Sir Sams Inn, which the Bishop's then owned. The present owner of Sir Sams Inn, James Orr, has allowed the practice to continue, but because of growth in his business, he has asked the islanders to find a new site.

A second parcel of land, known as Lot 35, which the islanders also own, recently was sold and the money set aside to develop a new docking site. Council looked at a number of alternatives, and recently decided to purchase the vacant property between Nick Lehoczy and Carl Wallace for the islanders' use.

Jim Strasman, spokesman for the island cottagers, said that while the arrangement with Sir Sams Inn can continue for some time, the islanders want a parking and docking site that is their own, but that is satisfactory to other property owners on the lake. Space is needed for 14 boats and about 30 cars, Strasman said.

While Block A could be developed for the islanders, neither they nor council believes the property is suitable for the purpose. There is no easy access to it, and because the lake is very shallow at that point, suitable docks would have to extend well out into the water. The area is also directly in front of the swimming beach Silver Eagle. A further complication is that a 66 foot road allowance abuts Block A, and if the site was developed, it would be impossible to deny the rest of the public access to the lake along the road allowance.

Reeve Murray Fearrey said council looked at a possible site on the other side of Silver Eagle Resort, but could not reach an agreement with the owners of the International Coopers property. When the Lehoczy property was made available, council purchase it "in the hope that we could finally resolve this dilemma."

Fearrey emphasized that the Lehoczy property would be deeded to the owners of the 14 lots on the island, access would be limited, and it would not become "a party place."

"Let's not over react" Fearrey urged property owners at the meeting. "I think this can be worked out. It's got to be next to somebody."

"I'd like to think that we can go ahead in an orderly fashion and develop the site as intended."

Asked to comment on the matter, Carl Wallace suggested council look into an alternative site at the north west end of the lake where the highway comes very close to the shore. He suggested it might be possible to fill a portion of the lake-ed to create the necessary parking and docking space.

While Fearrey said he had serious doubts the Ministry of Natural Resources would approve of such a scheme, he agreed to look into the matter before the Lehoczy property is developed.

Other matters discussed at the meeting included speeding boats and the possibility of setting speed limits in certain channels, and revitalizing the Eagle Lake Cottagers Association, which has lapsed in recent years. It was agreed to try to formally revive it at a meeting at the Eagle Lake Church on Thanksgiving weekend.

ment of being singled out, when "I'm sure there are lots of people equally handy and eager." He urged his neighbours to "shoulder down and keep pushing" when it came to protecting the lake everyone loves so much.

Goodger also received applause after she read her report outlining the various activities she has been involved in on behalf of the other residents. Supplying herself with the necessary props as she described how she wears a number of hats in the association, she had an attentive and appreciative audience.

The proposed Beau Valley Resort "appears to be dead" since no severance applications have been made and overseas funding did not come through. Signs of development should still be watched for, she said.

"In general, if you suspect that any subdivision is taking place on the lake, and especially on back lot property, please let me know. Watch for new roads heading into the bush and red survey stakes. There is a quite a lot of backlot property currently held by developers, who might decide to subdivide during the current booming cottage property market."

The booming market also came in to play when she talked about the county's move to hire a consultant to do a current market taxation reassessment impact study. "Due to the tremendous increase in the value of cottage property over the value of permanent residences, current market value assessment would mean that our cottage taxes would sky-rocket."

Another note of concern was in association with her wearing of FOCA's vice-president of operations' hat. She is a member of the Crown Land As A Development Tool, CLADT, committee and travelled to Whitney to view a provincial initiative "aimed at making crown land more available in order to diversify the economics of northern communities. As a member of the Implementation Committee, it is my responsibility to recommend possible uses of the land, which could be anything from cottaging to strip mining."

"I am very concerned that the specific disposition of crown land in the Whitney area is only a pilot project, which could be applied throughout the province. This means that the potential now exists for crown land on Kushog Lake to be opened up for development in the future. Thus the CLADT initiative has far-reaching implications for cottaging as we know it today."

An outdoor life the only one for Mac Trudeau

He still answers beckoning call of nature

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

"IT JUST COMES NATURAL," explains a lot of things when talking to Mac Trudeau. It explains why even though he's about to celebrate his 79th birthday, he spends most of his summer days fixing boats on his lawn and most of his winter days in his workshop making paddles. In between these two seasons, he'll spend a few weeks hunting and of course there's the fishing whenever he can get a chance. For him, working outside, getting his sustenance from the outdoors, is just a natural thing for him to do.

The debate comes into play when you discuss whether this is because he was born that way, or whether he was simply taught to be this way. Perhaps, if the truth could ever be known, it's a mixture of the two.

Mr. Trudeau is Metis; his father was a Chipewewa Indian and his mother was French Canadian. "I'm half and half," he says with a smile which hints he's given this line many times before. "I just don't know what half's the best."

The two halves welcomed the arrival of their son Mac in Penetanguishene in 1909. John Trudeau had long since left the reserve, striking out on his own, but still relying on the talents his father had taught him. Sophie had spent some time on the reserve, learning from the Indians what her parents couldn't teach her in the ways of the plants and forests.

A man of the woods

"Dad used to make birch bark canoes for us kids to play with," Mr. Trudeau remembers of his early days. "He was a good worker—a good Indian. He used to go into the woods for days to pick out a big birch. We used to work with him."

In the days before the trees were harvested by companies much larger than a tribe of Indians, John Trudeau could go out into the woods and find a birch tree large enough to supply him with the bark to make a canoe. Peeling the bark a half an inch from its surface, John could extract one sheet which would be bent over a form to shape the canoe. "The trees were big enough that just one tree would do it."

How John Trudeau got this skill could also be explained by the statement "it just comes natural," says his son. For the Indians, "the birch bark canoe is your trade and making it come natural to them."

Being willing to learn that which might not be natural to her, Sophie Trudeau soon became an expert at having the woods supply her with enough medicine to keep her family and other's healthy throughout the year. "She could go into a crick and make all sorts of medicine—Indian medicine, better than what you could buy in a store today."

Poplar trees provided her with a salve for sores. The pinch cherry trees were the primary source of a tonic the children had to take every spring and fall. "It's not the best taste but it kept you healthy."

Her son Mac also used to help her pick water-cress, which supplied her with another tonic and as soon as they felt a cold coming on, "she'd give us a few spoonfuls." The cold never lasted very long after that.

When Mac was still a child, his parents decided to move to a "little bit of a farm" near Orillia for a while. "Dad liked farming a bit too," along with the hunting and fishing and making birch bark

'You always like to do something,' says Mac Trudeau, who spends his retirement fixing boats. 'I could go to play cards lots of times, but I'd rather be working'

canoes.

Here the children helped their parents milk the cows so they could sell milk for five cents a quart and cream for eight or nine cents. It didn't surprise or bother them that they were expected to help—it just was another natural thing to do.

"You always like to do something," says Mr. Trudeau today, still a practitioner of this sentiment. With no television or radio, "all we knew was work."

It's not surprising that when Mr. Trudeau struck out on his own, he wanted to work outdoors. Bear Lake, in the Temagami region is about as outdoors as you can get. Still rugged and relatively unspoiled today (and the Indians who live there are fighting to keep it that way), it could offer him a way to make a living and satisfy his yen for outdoor life.

What can you do outside, he's asked. "Name it," comes the simple reply. "There lots of work outside and the air is fresh. You feel better outside, there's more comfort.

"In those days, my younger days, you had to get what you could get and make the best you can at it. I've worked for 50 cents a day—but I won't do it today. I don't have to."

For 14 years, Mr. Trudeau made the best of what Temagami had to offer. He worked in camps, cutting logs, sawing logs and skidding them to the mill or lake with horses. To help make ends meet, he saved money by getting his meat from the forest.

A reason for hunting

"If you're hungry enough, you'll go hunting," Mr. Trudeau says to people who are against hunting. "One time, everybody used to hunt and there were no hard feelings. People were in the bush doing the same thing you were."

"It's all sport. Hunting is sport. Fishing is sport. Nowadays I don't hunt as much as I used to because I don't need to." In Haliburton in the winter, you could travel along the logging roads and see 35 to 40 deer but you wouldn't shoot them because they were feeding on cedar and weren't in prime condition. "When they're good towards fall, it's good to go out and get them."

After 14 years in Temagami, Mr. Trudeau decided to become an apprentice at the Peterborough Canoe Company. The man who taught Mr. Trudeau the trade he still practices today was a very good teacher, and it is Mr. Trudeau's belief that "as long as you've got somebody good to work with," you can learn and do anything.

Haliburton became home in 1933 because "there was work here." (The Trudeau family would eventually include his wife Viola and daughters Sharon, Maxine and Jenna Marie.) He had spent three weeks working with his uncle in Toronto but three weeks was too long: "If this is what you call city, I'm getting out of here," he told his relative. "As far as the city goes, I don't like it, I never had any use for it."

In Haliburton he was able to find the lifestyle he enjoyed by getting a job at the Cooperage in Eagle Lake.

"The Cooperage, they used to keep this country. They had all kinds of men in the woods cutting timber" and then even more men working in the main buildings by the lake. His job was to turn the bar heads. "It was good work for the years—and I was 21 years there. The men all liked one another and a lot of them felt bad" when the Cooperage closed in the 1950s.

News of workmanship spread

Through the years, Mr. Trudeau kept up with the making of boats (when he wasn't building his house in the valley beside Victoria Street School.) At first, he just wanted to keep himself supplied, but then as word got around of his skill, he couldn't keep up with the orders to make boats for others.

To get Mr. Trudeau to explain how he makes a boat is a bit difficult because how can you put words to what "just comes natural"?

"I sure love canoes," he says in want of explanation. "They're nice to handle. You can carry them from one lake to another and go fishing on any lake you want to." His second favourite is the flat-bottomed boat. "They're a better fishing boat than ever you could get." Not only are they hard to tip, but they're wide enough for all the fish you're going to catch. (His local record is a 27 and a half pound lake trout from Redstone Lake.)

Brant Sisson, Mac Trudeau and Carl Sisson's catch

Cedar is the best material to work with for boats, although today he uses a lot of fiberglass. His father would have stopped leakage with gummy pine pitch, but his son finds it easier to buy the fiberglass.

To make a boat, you have to have a frame which you use to bend the wood around. "You start with a strip on the bottom and then work up both sides." But how? "You can't just throw pieces together, you've got to have a design."

The same thing applies when it comes to making paddles. He uses a "jig"—a shape of a paddle which he has previously measured out—and traces onto another piece of wood, preferably black cherry which is very light.

But getting the flat shape of the paddle is one thing, how do you perfect the symmetry of the handle and stem? You can't use any pattern for that.

"That's got to come natural to your hand, it just comes natural to me," he says. When he's making the paddle, does he think he's simply making something functional, or is there more of an art to it? "I think I'm making something nice. They sell themselves." Sometimes he goes back to work outside while people hum and haw over which paddle they like best.

The paddle and the canoe, together with a fisherman who's patient, make the best combination for a successful fishing trip. "I've caught a lot of fish with a nice light canoe and paddling your way around shore."

These fast boats are making it hard for fisherman, Mr. Trudeau says, at least for the fisherman who don't use gadgetry to help them find the fish. The fish don't like the noise and commotion and there's no point even going out on a busy lake.

"People have got more money now than they ever had," he says of the trend away from nice, quiet canoe trips through the lake chain. "That makes a big difference. I didn't have the money to buy a motor." If these people tried slowing down their pace a little, Mr. Trudeau says "I think they'd enjoy it."

To him, relaxing means taking a walk through the bush, or going out on some quiet lake for some fishing. That love of the outdoors has never dimmed, even though he now is in the position to add playing cards at the Drop-In Centre in his list of recreational activities.

Yet work can be relaxing too, especially now that he can do things because he wants to, not because he has to. "I've always had a happy life. I'm happy just the way I am. I love the work. I love it and I like it. I could go to play cards lots of time, but I'd rather be working."

After all, perhaps being content with life "just comes natural" too.

Show redefines 'native art'

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

MICHAEL ROBINSON IS A NATIVE Indian. His art work depicts native themes and spirituality. Yet to say that he is a "Native Artist", and his work is "Native Art" is to place false restrictions on a pursuit which, in its essence, is supposed to know no bounds. Art, no matter who produces it, is art.

Until September 10, Robinson's exhibit, Spirit of the Earth, is on display at the Rails' End Gallery. For those who think of native art simply as flowing black lines or brightly-coloured animal symbols bordered in black, the show will come as a surprise. The several pieces show a wide range of styles which explore a native identity but refuse to be bound to a pat description of what should be native art. In a way, the exhibit depicts a coming of age for a new generation of artists who happen to be natives.

"We're trying to get out of labels and get into the main contemporary art movement, but other cultures have had many more years to do it," Robinson says.

A few decades ago, a West Coast painter named Norval Morrisseau found himself in the limelight. His interpretation of the creative meanings behind the symbols of his culture became so well known, that his work formed the definition of native art in many people's minds. Other native artists approached their work along similar lines, thus adding to the belief that all natives saw the world in the same way.

In public perceptions, "the mistake is that people think natives have always been painting" and that Morrisseau was simply the first to be discovered, says Robinson. But painting for art's sake is a new phenomena in native culture. Before people expressed their creativity through the functional things they made, such as clothing and living spaces. But they didn't paint pictures to decorate a bare wall.

When they did draw or use paints it was to show songs and ceremonies, to try to explain the answers of Creation. "At the beginning, it was looked on as historical documentation."

Yet even though Robinson's view of the world has been shaped by the customs of the past, he was born in the modern age, and as a modern painter can only depict how he sees things in today's context. "I wasn't born 200 years ago. We all come into the world in a contemporary way. (My work is just me I guess. This is what I'm interested in, this is what I paint."

Non-natives may be able to paint in the same way, but very few of them ever would, and in this way there can be something called native art. The spirituality which is such a strong force in their world, is something which cannot be learned, it must be lived with.

At the same time, however, the native point of view is starting to be shared by a much wider audience. "Our main spiritual theme is the earth," and when Europeans first encountered this earth-bound view, they believed it endemic to native culture. "Europeans only saw that as local," Robinson says. "The irony now is it isn't local, it's global and we have no other choice."

The time has passed when we could simply point accusing fingers at who is causing the pollution which plagues the planet, he says; now we all have to live on it, so we must all work together towards solving the problems. It is what he calls, a "growing solidarity among everyone. We're so inter-related now—maybe native art will spearhead a new movement."

Coinciding with the Robinson exhibit is a show in the Waiting Room by Mary Ellen McQuay entitled Hand-painted photographs.

'We're trying to get out of labels and get into the main contemporary art movement,' says Michael Robinson, here explaining his work to Eric Lilius

Ankaret Dean to be luncheon's guest speaker

GUILD NOTES

by Virginia Muenzel

ATINKER, A TAILOR, A SOLDIER, AN artist! That is the subject Ankaret Dean promises to bring to us at the Guild's luncheon on September 14 at the PineStone Inn. Ankaret is such a delightful lady. And the luncheon promises to be a hit. Won't you please join us at noon on the above date. There are a few tickets still available at the Gallery.

While you are planning your own personal participation in the up-coming STUDIO TOUR, please remember that both Agnes Jamieson and the Rails' End Galleries will be open both days of the tour.

Agnes Jamieson Gallery, located over the bridge on Main St. in Minden, will have a sampling of the various artisan's works. Their hours during the tour are from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The Rails' End Gallery, which is located on York St. by the park in Haliburton, will be showing contemporary Native photography and pottery by Jean Rulka. The Gallery will be open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on October 1 and from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on October 2.

Barbara Joy Peel creates a wide range of clay and glazes as well as hand painted silk in her studio nestled in cedar grove on Skyline Park Road (That's the road to Lookout Park over Haliburton Village). She's in the first house on the right hand side. She does dark stoneware to delicate porcelain, functional. Some crystalline glazes.

Nature's many moods have motivated Ron Murdoch to his direct approach in watercolour painting in vibrant tones or subtle shades as required. His country home is located 4.8 km from Minden across the bridge then left on Deep Bay Road for 4 km to Murdoch Road, .8 km in.

You can visit Sharon Lynch at "The Animal Gallery" and more. Watercolours and pen and ink of four and two footed animals plus sparkling landscapes. Real slices of Haliburton life. Her studio is among the trees on the east side of Buckside Road, 4 km from Hwy. 35 at Halls Lake or 25 km north of Minden.

Mimi and Ted Carson operate Handcraft Wools Ltd., a yarn and fibre shop over the bridge in Minden. They also have a small flock of sheep on their farm, which is located on County Road 1 at Lochlin. Turn off onto Church /road to the first crossroad, turn right, the farm is on the left. Dur-

COMMUNITY NEWS

Social Club starts again

DORSET NEWS

by Phyllis Briscoe

School days, school days, good old golden rule days. Yes, the time is fast approaching when the youngsters will be back in the classrooms, the teachers will be back at work and parents will be relieved of some of the responsibility of full-time supervision of their children. I'm sure it must leave a void in the home at least for a while, especially when a little one is starting out for the first time to face him from hurts, physical or emotional. In modern times, little ones become used to mixing with other children at day care, centres and Nursery Schools and the transportation is less traumatic than when they were at home until they were five or six and then started school.

In Dorset we will have a new Teacher-Principal as Mrs. Ruth McLennan retired last June. The new instructor and caretaker of our children is Mrs. Michele Coneybeare of Minden. A bridal shower took place at the home of Don and Marlene Shortreed last Wednesday in honour of their daughter Allison, who is to be married to Michael Neumann on Saturday, August 27. The shower was well attended and Allison received ed many gifts. A meal repast was served after the packages were opened and the gifts admired.

My friend, Jean Jones from Scarborough, was here for a nice visit. We did a lot of travelling around and I enjoyed the company. Since I don't drive it is especially nice to have a guest who has a car.

The Dorset Social Club is beginning the fall season Wednesday, Sept. 14 at 6:00 p.m. with a pot luck supper. This will be followed with a general meeting. We hope there will be a good turnout so come and start where you left off in June and find out how your counterparts spent the summer. A pot luck is always lots of fun and good fun.

There was an interesting letter to the Editor in last week's Forester written by Annette Vallance. I am taking the liberty of repeating part of the contents so that anyone who did not read it will get the message. It's about a little boy in England who is dying of cancer and has made the wish that he will receive the most post cards, thereby getting into the Guinness Book of Records. The address "David, c/o Mrs. M.C. Williams, St. Martin Depones Infant School, Pasture Ways Luton, Bedfordshire, England." It costs $.74 cents to send a post card, air mail to England. Annette suggests a flood of cards from this area so let's get busy and try to make a little boy happy before it is too late.

A lovely wedding took place on Saturday, Aug. 27 at the charming home Marlene and Don Shortreed at the head of the bay, when their daughter, Allison married Michael Neumann, Rev. Judy Springer officiating. The wedding took place at 6 p.m. and was followed by a reception in the airplane hangar which had been beautifully decorated. After the ceremony, the bride and groom enjoyed a trip around the bay and through the village, making a stop to visit a friend who was unable to attend the service, on a motor launch, that had been appropriately decorated. There were 70 in all including the bridal party and guests. The happy couple will reside in Toronto.

Len and Eileen Barry enjoyed a visit to friends in the Falls area. They attended a party in Niagara Falls for Dick Isles, who celebrated his 75th birthday. They also visited with Bill and Lorna Rawlins at Port Colborne.

H.H. After tomatoes are picked, direct sunlight softens instead of ripening them. Leave them, stem side up in a dark place, a drawer or box and they will ripen. If left stem side up, they will not spoil.

Government pensions rise

INFORMATION

by Doreen Hawman

To keep in line with the cost living as of September 1, 1988, Old Age Security, Guaranteed Income Supplement, Spouses Allowance and Widowed Allowance have been increased.

Old Age Security pension rises from $315.97 to $320.08 per month. Guaranteed Income Supplement maximum goes from $375.51 to $380.39 for a single person and for a married recipient from $244.57 to $247.75. The maximum Spouses Allowance paid to low-income individuals between 60-64 increases from $618.85 to $626.90. The Canada Pension maximum amount for 1988 is $543.06.

If you have a question regarding your pension or need help completing forms, contact the Haliburton County Information Centre located in the Drag River Municipal Building, Maple Ave., Haliburton. The centre is open Monday-Friday 10:00 am to 4:00 p.m. or call 457-2733.

Tour offers variety of art

ing the STUDIO TOUR, they will be conducting demonstrations of wool processing, from the sorting of fleece, washing, carding and spinning. Different dyeing techniques will be used. There will be knitting and weaving demonstrations also. Mimi and Ted will be assisted by Dorothy Jean Connors, Shirley Hodgson, Hilda Sealey and Ted Walper.

Hildegard Sargeant is your hostess and folk artist at "Country Treasures." Discover a fine selection of traditional impressionistic folk art painted on wooden and metal treasures. She is located on the east side, 2.5 km north of Gelert on County Road 1.

At "Roosterview Creations", with Doreen Berry and Guest, you will find beautiful, unique and colourful stained glass lamps, windows, jewel boxes and suncatchers coupled with finely crafted paint creations. They are located on the left artery of Cox-farm Rd., 1.6 km from Hwy. 121E, 3.5 km northeast of Minden

Helen Newton creates "Seasons in Silk", beautiful handpainted silk scarves and blouses, bows, and earrings, batik wall hangings on pure silk and silk-screened wearing apparel. The studio is located on County Road 18 (South Kashagawigamog Rd.) 1.6 km east of Hwy. 121E, second driveway east of the bridge.

Ellen James creates unique leather designs from belts and bags to stuffed animals and clothes. She is located in the old Blairhampton United Church, on the corners of Blairhampton and Soyers Lake Roads, 16 km west of Haliburton, or 16.5 km north of Minden off Hwy. 121E.

There are still several artisans listed in the brochure. Leo will cover them in the next couple of weeks. As you can see there is a marvelous variety of media to be seen. And the artisans are rather evenly distributed between Minden and Haliburton areas. What a great way to spend the first two days in October. Hope to see you on the tour.

He traded his gun for a jack

DOWN OUR ROAD

"Hey, I'm sorry," he said, lowering the beam so it wasn't shining in the other fellow's face. "I thought you were burglars."

To make a long story short, the man was an employee of his neighbour, John Lloyd, and had offered to bring up the sailboat in return for a night at his boss' cottage. You see he and his wife—that was the other person in the truck—had just got back together after a six-month split. She was from Newfoundland, and after going home to her parents in Cornerbrook, had realized she wanted to return to her husband. He had missed her terribly and so this night was to have been a kind of second honeymoon for them.

Only the directions his boss had given him had not been the best. He had told them his cottage was at end of three hills off the Buckslide Road. And you know how many hills there are in this neck of the woods. They had been going up and down the road for over an hour, trying to find the place. They finally figured out it had to be this way but couldn't recognize the description in the dark. Once they were told it was the next cottage over, they sighed in relief and when he invited them in for a quick brandy, to steady everyone's nerves, they broke into delighted smiles.

The next morning he was just starting his second cup of coffee when there was a knock at the door. The wife from Newfoundland stood there in the rain and asked him if he had a jack. They must have picked up a nail in one of the tires, because it was as flat as a mushroom in the morning and they had no jack. So there he was, mud up to his armpits, helping the same people he had been ready to shoot the tires out from under the night before. There was a certain irony to the situation, which he explained to them over a brandy in his living room later. After all, they had to warm themselves up after getting soaked to the skin in that rain.

Band gathers after fair Home Support holds lunch

WEST GUILFORD NEWS

by Eleanor Cooper

Every year after the Kinmount Fair, a band party is hosted at the home of one of the members. This year the pipe band and families enjoyed a pot-luck supper at our place. The weather co-operated enough for a good piping and drumming session out of doors, we ate indoors. Earl, then Alan provided extra solo piping. George, Shireen and Luke were down from Timmins, and Beth was home from Toronto. Were we missing

Andy?

Guests at the party included: Cora and Gord Kennedy; Vi and Ken Walsh; Fred Waller; Bill Mighton; Callum Wood; Don Johnston; Joy and Richard Fielding; Jack and Laura Bannion with daughters, Donna and Nancy and Nancy's daughter, Jeannine; Brian, Sharon and Andrew Sachs and friends, Jo and Wendy Cianci, Caroline, Bill and Christine Carpenter and Janet, Alan and son John

Injured man finally speaks to family

CARNARVON NEWS

by Ann McKay

Vacationing with the Jack Gregory's and Mrs. Joan Fennell recent were Mr. and Mrs. Stan Vass of Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

Visiting with Cliff and Helen Skelding were Mr. and Mrs. Sid Barnes of Lindsay during the week and Mr. and Mrs. Jim Redner on the holiday weekend.

Tom and Melissa Archer of London, Ontario, children of Mr. and Mrs. Cliff Archer, were involved in a traffic accident last Tuesday in the Dorset area. Melissa was air-lifted to London Hospital from Huntsville. Her back is broken in two places, with internal injuries from seat belt pressure, and broken cheek bones. Tom was treated for facial lacerations and broken teeth before being released. Our thoughts and prayers are with their family, including grand parents Mildred and Stan

Archer.

Mr. and Mrs. M. McGregor of Toronto spent the weekend with her mother, Mrs. Edith Russell.

I hope everyone responded to the Jerry Lewis Telethon over the weekend to help fight the crippling diseases affecting so many people today, especially the very young. I myself was thinking as I washed sticky fingerprints from patio doors, TV and coffee tables from two small children over the weekend. Thank God, they can run around and put them there.

Good news from the Rowden family. Ken, who has been in a coma since his accident, spoke to them last Sunday for the first time. We do sincerely hope this is his first step to a complete recovery. Ken is in Civic Hospital, Peterborough.

Mrs. Nell Rowden had the rest of her family home for the holiday weekend.

Duncan from Edinburgh; Bob and June White; Lloyd and Joan Kramp; Lloyd and Joanne Brown; Lew and Joan Brown.

Banjo, fiddle and mandolin tunes to Kathleen Owens' accompaniment on piano kept the evening lively and a few songs were sung. Gord Kennedy also played the piano for singing. It is the kind of evening we'd like to see continue at least annually.

Little Theatre is beginning again with auditions coming up soon. We need you, people. On stage, or back stage your presence will be appreciated. Watch for the ad concerning audition night.

I may well have to give up writing this column for a few months while I do a correspondence course. Isn't that ironic: to give up writing in order to do more writing? If you out there have any inclination to take on this weekly task which is certainly most pleasurable, give me or the Echo a call. You could take it on full-time or just till end of April. If there is no response, the column is apt to be very short or very limited in content since time to hone around for news will be minimal.

Valerie, Ken, Laura and Dan Chumbley are on holiday with Ken's parents for a week in the Maritimes.

Heather Harrington of Calgary is on vacation at her parents, Carol and Ten Duncan, with Don Tchida.

Shilrey Rapson has been promoting tourism in our County by working this past week at the Eaton Centre at the Provincial Tourism Information booth for the Chamber of Commerce.

WILBERFORCE NEWS

by Marian Donovan

On Friday, September 16, at the Lloyd Watson Centre in Wilberforce, the Haliburton County Home Support Services will hold a dinner meeting. Dinner will be served at 12:00 noon. Starting at 1:15 p.m. the meeting will begin, with dinner guest speaker Earl MacDuff on the topic of Drug and Alcohol Abuse.

I have heard Earl speak, so if you are interested in learning some facts on the problems that alcohol and drugs can have in the home, come and listen. It might be the best $7. you ever spend. Who better than the Haliburton Home Support Services can know of the family upheaval that occurs when one or members have a problem.

The Harcourt Art Group will start meeting again soon at the Harcourt Community Centre. There is no fee to join and no previous training required. If you have never drawn or painted, but want to, come out and join us on any Monday night at 8:00 or Tuesday afternoon at 1:00. For information and starting date call Claire Loft at 448-2550 or myself at 448-2617.

Monday night euchre scores from the Highland Grove Community Centre were as follows: Men's and Ladies' high scores, 'Sulo Soper and Annie Rowley. Most lone hands went to Irwin Bowen and Nellie Jones. Low scorers were David Lawrence and Ida Holmes, and Ray Hunt won the travellers' prize.

First prize at the Tuesday night bridge club held at Tory Hill Community Centre went to Nick Lehoczy of Eagle Lake with Gwen Taylor of Gooderham coming a very close second. Gordon Pelling of Cardiff came third and the consolation was won by Winona McEwen, also of Cardiff.

I almost didn't get this column done week as I am baby sitting one of my little grandsons while trying to cope with the long weekend rush. I have been managing without m clothes dryer this summer (it gave up the ghost pleading overwork). However, my son Michael and family arrived with a new one, so blame me for this rainy weekend. Mother Nature saw fit to kindly give me a beautiful summer for drying all my bedding, then knowing I had a dryer this weekend she let it all come down. Sorry folks.

Born in SEPTEMBER?

A maiden born when autumn leaves are rustling in September's breeze. A Sapphire on her brow should bind to keep her keen and quick of mind.

The ancient Persians believed that the earth rested on a giant blue sapphire with the sky a mirror for its radiant blue. Sapphires were said to attract divine favor. The significance of the beautiful sapphire is clear thinking and wisdom.

It comes from Siam, India, Burma, Ceylon, Australia and the United States.

News on Real Estate

By Linda Beachli

Questions: What is an appraisal? What's it worth? An excellent question prior to a major purchase or sale, what is it really worth?

Chances are you'll receive just about as many opinions as people you talk to. In real estate you'll get a lot of advice, if it's your property, everyone will have a view: you paid too much, sold too low, made a great deal, didn't know what was happening.

Fortunately, in real estate there's a way through this maze of contrary opinion—through appraisal by qualified real estate appraiser.

An appraisal is an impartial estimate or opinion of value of real estate. The appraisal is usually a written statement setting forth an opinion of the value of an adequately described property as of a specific date and supported by the presentation and analysis of relevant data.

What's it all about?

Any decision about the value of real estate must be based upon an appraisal of some sort. An appraisal is an estimate, an opinion, presented by a trained professional.

The accuracy and value of an appraisal depends upon the individual who makes that appraisal, the skill which that person possesses and the availability to this person of relevant facts and data.

If the appraiser is skilled and highly qualified, the chances of success in the transaction are very much improved.

That's what the Appraisal Institute of Canada is all about: providing Canadians with qualified and skilled appraisers who must complete a rigorous course of studies to receive use of designation AACI (Accredited Appraiser Canadian Institute) or CRA (Canadian Residential Appraiser).

How?

The professional appraiser is after facts. The appraiser will check a building thoroughly—appearance, condition of major plumbing and wiring, mechanical equipment, location and proximity of services, schools, shopping, parks etc.

In addition, the professional appraiser is well versed in current market trends, in general values of real estate in the area and in taxes and special assessments; a whole range of items which could affect value.

The professional appraiser is also able to provide consultant services—including feasibility studies into land use, property management and related information.

Who?

You can recognize a qualified appraiser of the Appraisal Institute of Canada by the designations AACI or CRA.

Here are just a few of the many good reasons for having an appraisal made of your property: 1) To obtain a professional opinion of the present value of your home or property you wish to buy or sell. 2) To obtain a professional opinion of the value of the home or other land you want to build. 3) To obtain a qualified opinion for mortgage or lending purposes. 4) To provide investors with adequate information upon which to base investment decisions. 5)

To obtain an expert opinion of the value of a home or other property as a prudent safeguard against excessive tax assessments, capital gains payments and taxes. 6) To verify damage claims resulting from fire, rain, hail, windstorms, and other disasters. 7) To obtain an expert opinion of value of a home or other property as the basis for "just compensation" in cases where property is to be taken for future public use.

Appraisals are complicated and your real estate agent is qualified to give you an opinion of value on your property, but few are qualified to give an appraisal.
